NMSU Cooperative Extension Service

The entire state is our campus. We have research and teaching faculty in your community as well as volunteers, 4-H leaders, and advisory board members. We are the people of New Mexico State University's Cooperative Extension Service, located in 33 county offices, many agricultural science centers, and several other district, state, and tribal locations. Our job is to bring science to your life.

We teach in workshops, classrooms, at seminars, via computers, and in special community courses. We bring non-credit, practical education to you. We create programs and services to help solve local problems—Extension is responsive to current needs. Today, we are organizing our system to respond in four broad arenas—drought; homeland security; water; and community, family health, and wellness. With the help of volunteers, including local advisory groups, Extension will be part of the solution to New Mexico's citizens' most daunting challenges.

We cooperate with federal, state, and local organizations. County Extension offices are part of county government in partnership with NMSU and the U.S. Department of Agriculture. Extension is best known for its 4-H youth development program—the world's largest youth organization. But 4-H is only a part of a much bigger Extension program that has goals of supporting New Mexico families, communities, agriculture, and the environment. We distribute useful, research-based information in publications, CD-ROMs, videotape, and other forms of electronic telecommunications on just about any problem or task you might face in your daily life.

Individual gifts and local government funding are essential to carrying out NMSU Cooperative Extension Service programs that make a genuine difference in the lives of your neighbors here in New Mexico. Contact us or your local Extension office for details on how you can help.
