Somewhat Home-made Cooking

Home cooked meals? No time to cook? For many people, cooking seems like a serious chore. It seems much easier to just order some takeout food, stop at a restaurant, or pop a ready-made meal into the microwave. It’s not so much a matter of laziness, but of time. A lot of people have overstuffed schedules and often feel there is no time to devote to food preparation.

Included in this booklet are techniques for combining fresh ingredients with specially selected store bought items or convenience foods. Whether you call it semi-homemade, shortcut cooking or almost homemade the results—mouthwatering meals and desserts, prepared in minutes that taste like they were made from scratch.

We all want home-made flavor in the foods we serve our families and ourselves. But we don’t want all the fuss that comes with homemade. So “Somewhat Home-made” can be the best of both worlds. There are several options for “Somewhat Home-made Cooking”.

- Embellish certain helpful supermarket products by adding ingredients to them.
- Use shortcut products in our homemade recipes to cut down on prep time.
- Or we can choose assembly-like recipes, where we’re basically putting various products and ingredients together to make tasty and interesting dishes.

Convenience foods are those that are partially or fully prepared. They can be canned, frozen, ready-to-eat, ready-to use or packaged mixes. When deciding what to buy, think about your time, energy, the quality of the food you can purchase and your food budget. Many convenience foods are actually less expensive than the home-prepared counterpart.

For easy recognition the convenience foods are identified with bold font in the following recipes.
