

Just making ends meet...

That's how Nazario C' de Baca made his way through New Mexico State University in the mid-1930s. Twenty-five-cent lunches, part-time jobs and a $6-a-month room he shared. By 1940, Nazario's patient struggle paid off; he earned his bachelor's degree in agronomy and soils and began a stunning international career.

Because of the education he received at New Mexico State, Nazario is now giving back to his alma mater with a charitable gift annuity. Nazario is ensuring that future Aggies will be able to walk on our campus thinking about more important things than money, such as teaching people how to be better parents and ensuring future supplies of safe food and water.
